Tango had bred Page, obviously, and Dani didn't want to abort the litter because she was afraid it would affect any possibilities of litters so she let her continue with the pregnancy. I'm not positive if she was in labor yet or not when the uterus started to rupture and Page started to crash so Dani ran her to the vet. Carol Stone covered all the vet bills (but hasn't gotten any of it back yet!) They had to take blood straight out of Singer to give to Page while doing an emergency cesarean because they were neither set up to do transfusions nor had blood products available. Then a day or two, maybe 3 days later the stump from the removal of the uterus started to hemorrhage and she just basically bleed to death by bleeding internally. She had been told to keep her quiet at all costs and to minimize any and all activity but you know they all just turned her out into the yard to potty her. I don't remember how many puppies she had but she refers to them as "Spit-man-dos"

And this is one of Page's puppies from her last litter; the litter that helped cause her death.
